Hi Dad,

I felt so good when I got this email, that I just wanted to read it to someone, or send it to someone... It's from a political science professor I had last semester for International Relations. She's just a visiting professor from Brown, and I asked her to write me a recommendation letter both for grad school and for the 4 scholarships I'm applying to this spring (that makes 5 total, including the Fulbright). This is the same professor who left me that really nice voice-mail message that I told you and mom about, and played for either you or mom or both. She is a young, nice woman with long hair who is something of a modern scatter-brain and always drinks diet Coke cans, like me! Needless to say, I like the professor a lot, and I know (now) that she likes me too. So I trust (and hope) she wrote a good recommendation for me (!).

I'm really busy this week. I earned $76 today babysitting, 9.5 hours at $8 an hour... and I'll do the same on Friday. Meanwhile, both Tuesday and Thursday I have class all day (morning 'till 7pm) and on Monday I typed, edited, finalized and sent all 4 applications. I'm busy! So I'm going to go to sleep now, at only 10:50pm!!! (like you) since I've been awake since 7am. I know this doesn't impress you, but it does me! Good night, and I hope to talk to you soon! (ps-- I called Demsie the other night to thank her for her $20+Valentine's Day Card.)

bye! love, Kysa

Hi Kysa, just wanted you to know that today I mailed your recommendations into the offices at Barnard. I sent both the one for the immediate research grant (to the Dean of students) as well as the general grad school one for your files. I wrote an excellent letter and I hope it helps because I truly believe all the terrific things I can say on your behalf. You are an exceptional student and I have absolutely no doubt of your continued success. So kweep me posted and I wish you so very much luck. Best regards, JH
